WHAT AUDIENCES HAVE SAID

"I applaud those of you who worked on this film for bringing such a crucial and mind-expanding perspective to the realm of mental health. By its very nature, this documentary strikes at the heart of our culture's self-destructive propensity to stigmatize and condemn people that simply need acceptance, support, and guidance to find a path to wellness and purpose. The film's emphasis on Peer Mentoring and Peer Support as an essential component to helping people through crisis made me enormously grateful."

"I can hardly describe the effect that this incredibly powerful and profound documentary had on me. I cried at the end. It touched my soul and moved me beyond words. I felt connected to the reality of the folks in it. I have always felt a spiritual dimension to having voices and seeing visions."

"Crazywise reminds me of what's wrong with our university psychology programs today...they're so caught up with teaching and technique instead of emphasizing relationships..."

"If I had seen Crazywise or heard of it's transformative message 25 years ago I may not have felt condemned to a life of suffering when I was given a psychiatric diagnosis. Instead, I may have felt a sense of hope that I could find an accepting community that would help me grow and find meaning in my experiences."

Crazy or wise? The traditional wisdom of indigenous cultures often contradicts modern views about a mental health crisis. Is it a "calling" to grow or just a "broken brain"? This documentary explores what can be learned from people around the world who have turned their psychological crisis into a positive transformative experience.
